ENTERTAINMENT AT THE FEBRUARY BUSINESS MEETING IMAGES OF SULAWESI

Join us for a presentation of the beautiful, wondrous underwater world of Indonesia, in particular, Sulawesi/Wakatobi presented by our very own Dan Balsam and Al Krenz. Dan and Al made the very long trek out to Indonesia, they have some fantastic photos of the beautiful underwater scenery they discovered and some great anecdotes of their travels. Besides Sulawesi and Wakatobi they also stopped off in Bali for a couple of days. Don't miss this one!

HOW MANY DO YOU HAVE?

Dives that is. . .how many do you have? A few of us were talking after the business meeting (all right there was some libation involved) and were just wondering how many dives the club members would have if we added them all up. So we are conducting a brief, unscientific poll. Send your total count to the editor of the Trib (promund@kraft.com) or to the PO Box. Many thanks!

WINE TASTING

Fourteen Tritons (double the number we had at the last tasting) gathered at the Cooper's Hawk Winery in South Barrington to sample some wine and more! We tasted 8 different wines, enjoyed some chocolates and ended up having dinner at the restaurant.

Cooper's Hawk has the distinction of being the only Illinois winery selected to be part of the recent Presidential Inauguration. We began with a sparkling wine, Blanc de Blanc (Michele Obama picked this to be used for the Presidential toast). We all thought this one very good. This was followed by additional whites: Pinot Gris (dry), Viognier (fruity), and Riesling (surprise, not very sweet). We then went to the reds: Pinto Noir, Cabernet Tannat (both served at the inauguration), followed by a Shiraz and a dessert peach fruit wine.

The winery set us up with our own bar staffed by Maria, she answered our questions and shared her knowledge of wines, chocolate and even diving! We then retired to the restaurant to enjoy dinner and a bit more wine. This was an excellent way to spend a Sunday - enjoy some great wine and very good food. This has proved to be a popular event and we will do it again.

Thanks to Al Krenz and Dave Vemmer for sending this to our attention, the article below is reprinted from www.computerworld.com. You need to have the latest version of Google Earth (5.0) downloaded to your computer; then click on "oceans." There's a number of sub-menus under "oceans" that will take you where ever you want to go (or see) in the ocean.

GOOGLE EARTH LETS USERS DIVE IN TO EXPLORE OCEAN DEPTHS

Latest version of Google Earth also offers 3-D maps of Mars and historical images

By Sharon Gaudin

February 2, 2009 (Computerworld) Dory and Marlin would likely have had an easier time finding Nemo if the new version of Google Earth was around at the time.

Google Inc. today launched the latest version of Google Earth, which promises to provide users with a much closer look at the Earth's oceans. The new version includes a detailed map of the ocean floor, Google noted.

John Hanke, director of Google Earth and Maps, wrote in a blog post today that the popular Google Earth has long showed users the ocean -- but mostly just as a big blue area with some basic shading to show depth. "But starting today we have a much more detailed bathymetric map (the ocean floor), so you can actually drop below the surface and explore the nooks and crannies of the seafloor in 3D," wrote Hanke. "While you're there, you can explore thousands of data points, including videos and images of ocean life, details on the best surf spots, logs of real ocean expeditions, and much more."

In a separate statement, Hanke added, "What this project helped me begin to understand is the role the ocean plays in global climate change and the impact that humans are having on the oceans and the creatures that live in it. It was a serious omission on our part not to include a better treatment of the oceans when we launched Google Earth, and I'm very happy that we've been able to address that. We now have a good substrate for publishing and exploring data about the 'other' two-thirds of the planet."

Caroline Dangson, an analyst at IDC, said the addition of ocean views in the new version of Google Earth is significant for users.

"Google is a market leader because it does not see limits to what its services can do," she said. "Oceans add much more content to Google Earth for consumers to explore. Ocean in Google Earth is sticky and will keep consumers on the service longer, exploring places only a few scientists have been."

The new version also includes several other updates, according to Google.

For example, the application now has historical imagery, showing users images of a place years or even decades in the past. It's designed so that when someone uses the new time slider -- by clicking on the clock icon in the toolbar -- they can see how an area has changed over time.

Google also collaborated with NASA to add a 3-D map of Mars. The map includes the latest high-resolution imagery from the space agency and is accessed via a new Mars icon on the Google Earth toolbar.

But analysts said the ocean view is creating the most buzz among users.

"This is a good evolutionary move for Google," said Dan Olds, principal analyst at Gabriel Consulting Group Inc. "Google Earth is becoming a key tool for a lot of users and a component in a lot of businesses operations -- everything from using it to show consumers their store locations to using it to route shipments. So why not add the rest of the Earth to it?"

Olds noted that he was impressed with how Google expanded its data storage capabilities to take on all the extra information, since about two-thirds of the planet is made up of water. "This is going to be great for companies that want to see where their container load of shoes is at a particular moment," added Olds. "Take Nike, for example. Sure, they can get GPS coordinates from the shipper, but Google Earth will let them see where their shipment is visually. It's not a complete revolution, but an interesting revolution."

WRECK OF WARSHIP IS FOUND

By WILLIAM J. BROAD

Published: February 2, 2009

Sea explorers probing the depths of the English Channel have discovered what they say is a legendary British warship that sank in a fierce storm in 1744 with the loss of more than 900 men and possibly four tons of gold coins valued at $1 billion.

The team found the wreckage of the HMS Victory last year and confirmed its identity through a close examination of 41 bronze cannons visible on the sandy ocean bottom, Greg Stemm, head of the discovery team, said at a news conference Monday in London.

Odyssey Marine Exploration, Inc/Associated Press

An underwater photo of a bronze cannon on the shipwreck, which bears the royal crest of King George I.

The team lifted two of the cannons and gave them to the British Ministry of Defense, he said, and is now negotiating with British authorities on the disposition of the artifacts and treasure before it attempts further recoveries.

"I'm surprised we've been able to keep it under wraps for nine months," Mr. Stemm said at the news conference, calling the find "a momentous discovery." He is the head of Odyssey Marine Exploration Inc. of Tampa, Fla., a company that specializes in deep sea exploration and recovery.

In a telephone interview, Mr. Stemm called the find "hard to beat" in terms of raw history, lost treasure and solved mysteries. The team found the wreck far from its reported resting place, and said the discovery had cleared the name of its commander, Admiral Sir John Balchin, whose navigation had been impugned after the catastrophic loss.

The press conference was held by the Discovery Channel, which plans to broadcast a segment Thursday about the ship on its weekly "Treasure Quest" program, which debuted last month.

The Victory was armed with up to 110 bronze cannons, making it one of the deadliest vessels of the age. The biggest cannon weighed four tons and could fire cannonballs weighing 42 pounds — the largest and most powerful guns then used in naval warfare.

In July 1744, the flagship and its fleet of warships were sent to rescue a Mediterranean convoy blockaded by a French fleet at Lisbon. After chasing the French away, the Victory escorted the convoy as far as Gibraltar and headed home.

A hard gale scattered the British fleet shortly after it entered the English Channel, and on Oct. 5, 1744, somewhere off the Channel Islands, Victory went down with all hands. The flagship was the only member of the British fleet lost at sea.

The belief spread that ship had grounded on the Casquets, a group of rocky islets west of Alderney that protrude a few dozen feet above the water line. The rocks are called the "graveyard of the English Channel." The lighthouse keeper of Alderney was court-martialed for failing to keep the lights on at the time of the ship's disappearance.

That November, a Dutch newspaper reported that Victory had been carrying 400,000 pounds sterling from Lisbon that was destined for Dutch merchants. At the news conference, the ship's finders said that would amount to about four tons of gold coins.

Historically, Victory was the last Royal Navy warship to be lost with a complete set of bronze cannons.

For decades, Mr. Stemm and his colleagues worked on the cutting edge of deep sea exploration, using sonars and robots to discover scores of interesting wrecks and thousands of artifacts. They have found treasures valued at hundreds of millions of dollars.

Last April, the Odyssey team was exploring the English Channel when a sonar registered an intriguing blip. Investigations with a tethered robot showed the seabed covered with a copper cooking kettle, hull remains, rectangular iron ballast, two anchors, rigging, two probable gunner's wheels and 41 bronze cannons, including eight large guns that could fire 42-pound cannonballs.

"These were the biggest cannon in the age of sail," Mr. Stemm told the news conference. "These things are huge, simply amazing."

Editor's Note: If you would like to learn more about this wreck and others in the coming weeks tune into the Discovery Channel and the show Treasure Quest broadcast on Thursdays at 9:00 PM (CST). The show runs through March 26.

NEW FILMS OPEN FEBRUARY 13 AT THE MUSEUM OF SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY

Mysteries of the Great Lakes explores the beauty of North America's inland seas. Did you know that it takes a drop of water nearly 400 years to travel from the headwaters of Lake Superior to the edge of Lake Ontario? Along the way, the water passes by towering cliffs dotted with early Native American pictographs, caribou and moose grazing on the shores, over giant prehistoric sturgeon lurking among thousands of shipwrecks and past nearly 40 million people who live along the more than 10,000 miles of coastline. You won't want to miss this film, which offers a dramatic journey through some of the most spectacular scenery in the world.

Also continuing until May 24 is the Wild Ocean. Filmed in South Africa, where each year a massive feeding frenzy takes place as billions of fish migrate up the KwaZulu-Natal Wild Coast. Breaching whales, frenzied sharks, herding dolphins, and diving gannets all compete in an underwater struggle for survival. Wild Ocean is a documentary that will take you into the ocean depths to examine the effects of global warming and overfishing on the great migration and effort to protect this valuable resource.

CHINESE NEW YEAR!

Sunday, January 25

We came, we saw, we ate! Seven very hungry Tritons gathered at Chang Jiang Buffet in Des Plaines to celebrate Chinese New Year. The restaurant was packed, standing room only – thankfully I had made reservations and we only had a short wait before we were shown to our table. Our waiter greeted us with a few jokes and put all of us in a party mood. We then hit the buffet, actually four long buffet tables with all sorts of Asian and some American cuisine. We made several trips back to the buffet for crab rangoon, pot stickers, soups, salads, sweet and sour chicken, Mongolian beef, crab legs – you name it they had it. We all agreed we ate way too much but we had a great time. It was a wonderful way to spend a bitterly cold January day, with good food and great friends. Thanks to all for coming on out and adding to the fun!

SEARCH FOR MISSING SAILORS CALLED OFF

Quen Cultra, of Onarga, Ill., and Joe Strykowski, who was born and raised in Chicago, were last seen by their shipmate who was rescued by the French Navy on Wednesday morning, said U.S. Coast Guard Petty Officer Second Class James Harless. Leo Sherman, of Gilman, Ill., was found clinging to the overturned vessel, a 43-foot catamaran named Queequeg II.

The crew had been nearing the end of a two-year, around-the-world sailing voyage when the capsule encountered bad weather in the Indian Ocean, Harless said. On Monday, someone activated the vessel's electronic positioning radio beacon, which sent out a satellite signal of distress to the U.S. Coast Guard's 7th District in Miami, where the device was registered.

The Coast Guard notified the France Missions Control Center and sent out an alert to merchant marine ships. A freight vessel was the first to arrive Tuesday, but the crewmen did not find any survivors. The French Navy arrived Wednesday morning and a second sweep found Sherman hanging onto the upside down capsule.

Divers searched for the two missing men Friday, said Strykowski's daughter, Nicole, of Oregon state, but their efforts turned up nothing. She said her family is completely distraught over the decision to call off the search. They hold firm to the belief that her father could be alive.

"This is not your average man lost at sea. This is someone with a really good shot of surviving," she said, adding that her father always stressed safety first and was an expert on marine life.

Strykowski, who lives in Florida, is the author of a number of books on diving and the environment (including Diving for Fun). He holds a doctorate in environmental studies and is the founder of The Star Thrower Foundation, a nonprofit dedicated to the preservation and protection of ocean wildlife. His daughters said he grew up in Portage Park and has always considered Chicago his home base despite his extensive travels.

Cultra was also strongly drawn to the open sea. In 2003, the Tribune wrote about him and his adventure sailing around Cape Horn off the coast of South America. In the 1960s, he built his own boat in the barnyard of his family farm and sailed around the world. He wrote about his journey in a book "Queequeg's Odyssey--A High Seas Adventure."

Nicole Strykowski said her father and Cultra began their latest adventure in September 2007 and had tentatively planned to return to the United States sometime this summer. A number of "crew members" joined them on different legs throughout the journey, according to their Web site, www.queequegtwo.com, which chronicled the trip.

Nicole Strykowski said the family had thought about organizing a welcome home party for the men in Florida. "I wish we were still doing that," she said. Now, the family is trying to figure out its next steps. No bodies have been recovered.

"If anyone could make it out of this situation, these men could," she said. "We love him very much and we believe that he's still out there and we'd like the search to continue."

TRIVIA

Do you amaze and amuse your friends with seemingly useless knowledge & fun facts you can pull out of the recesses of your gray matter? If so pass it on! We are looking for all sorts of marine trivia: items relating to marine life, oceanography, seaports, currents, pirates, the Great Lakes, you name it, if it is at all related to water send it on. Our hope is to gather enough information to put a small contest together. So as you read dive magazines, peruse various dive sites or otherwise pass the time remember to send in your fun facts. All submissions can be sent to the editor: promund@kraft.com or to the PO Box. Thanks!
